

The Age of Responsibility: When to Give Major Money to the Next Generation

“ A long-ago client of mine had a cousin who inherited more than $250,000 at age 21; it was gone in a few years, spent on tropical fish. His mother had no control over his spending. ”

– LNWM Client Advisor

“Major money” and “young people” are a volatile mix. There’s lots that can go right but also very, very wrong. While there is no one answer as to when the younger generation should come into a big part of their inheritance, it is best to have a plan in place well before assets change hands.

For insights based on experience, we surveyed LNWM Client Advisors. It is a question they get often and for which they have seen many scenarios play out over time. Here are the major points of agreement:

1. Limit Access Before Age 25

There are many ways to do this, depending on the situation.

Kristi Mathisen, Director of Tax and Financial Planning at LNWM, offers this approach:

- Age 21 to 25: give young people access to income from the assets, but not the principal.
- Age 25 to 35. Allow joint control of the assets, in essence making the young person responsible but with supervision (akin to a co-trustee).
- Age 35 and up. Take off the training wheels, if the young person has shown interest and responsibility.

Adds Kristi: “If someone cannot be trusted to manage their finances by age 35, they probably will never be.”

Sam Craig, LNWM Client Advisor: “Transferring major money at age 21 (or perhaps even 25) is risky, since most people at this age are exploring and likely to use a good portion of the assets to do that. Since young adults generally settle down in their 30s these days, I often recommend that assets are transferred to them starting at age 30, 35, or even 40, and usually in stages. This makes it more likely that the money will be used for things with long-term value, such as a down payment on a home and/or help making the next career move.”

2. Give in Steps, for Specific Things

Susan Talton, LNWM Client Advisor: “Starting out, I would give money to young adults only for specific things – to buy a car, take a trip or make a deposit on a rental. The amount of other money given should depend on what other needs they might have, with a focus on encouraging newly minted adults to work hard in school or at their first real job. Gifts should not be so large that they allow a young person to stop striving.”

3. Focus On the Recipients: Their Unique Needs, Goals, Personalities

Jeanne Goussev, Managing Director of Fiduciary Services: “What is an enabling gift for one person can cause for trouble for another. So gifting or structuring an inheritance should be done with intent and with the recipient in mind. One size does not fit all!

Carefully consider the recipients' experience with managing money. How have they done in the past? Are they savers or spenders? Parents may want to start by giving a little money that children can manage and invest on their own as teenagers or even younger. Have them set up a budget and track their spending. Learning how to budget – how much to spend, save and donate – at a young age is a skill that pays great dividends throughout life.

If the money will eventually pass on to very young children or future generations, it is critical that the current beneficiaries not squander the assets.

Trusts provide the most control in regard to whom your assets go, when and how. And trusts can allow for your assets to last for more than one generation, if that is intended. You can specify what portion of assets or income will be distributed at various ages — say 25, 35, 40 — for various milestones (graduate school, down payment on a house, etc., birth of a child). Another major benefit of trusts is that the assets in trust are protected from creditors and also from any future divorce settlements.”

4. Consider “What If” Scenarios

Susan Zurek, Fiduciary Advisor: “A key thing that gets overlooked when parents leave money to children/grandchildren are the “what ifs.” While we all hope for the best, unforeseen challenges are part of life — accidents, health issues, divorce, etc.

An irrevocable trust for the benefit of a young person can contain a statement that says something like: If something should happen, and the young person qualifies as having special needs, then the trustee is authorized to open a Special Needs Trust. Such a trust would fund the living expenses of the beneficiary but not disqualify the person from

Mind Their Money Personality

When deciding when to give money to young people, it’s a good idea to take into account their “money personality,” or their tendency toward saving, spending, risk-taking, etc. Money personalities can vary greatly within the same family. And each money personality comes with its good and bad attributes. A fun way to get a quick read on money personality is to take our Money Personality Quiz.

Put Family Stories to Good Use

This interview with psychology professor Marshall Duke, Ph.D. explains how to use family stories to foster responsibility and resiliency in children, so they are able to make the best use of their inheritance and carry on the family legacy.

getting government aid. This can also apply to young people who have known health or behavioral issues. They may be fine now but worse off in five or 10 years. The trust would have guidelines the trustee can use to determine if the beneficiary's condition is deteriorating and what to do in response.

My advice to clients is to think about the legacy they want to leave, think about their children and grandchildren and what would benefit them. Dollar amounts and age don't necessarily matter because $50,000 to one person could be like $500,000 to another. We have seen children that were given money before they turned 18 and still have it and are using it wisely.

This is not an easy decision. This is why we work closely with clients to explore how to transfer assets to the next generation in a way that enables young people, furthers the family legacy and makes the most sense financially for everyone involved." ▣

Levels of Access and Control

The "legal" age, when a young person can access funds in their name, is 18 to 21 years old, depending on the state of residence.

Less Control ←

→ More Control

Custodial accounts in the child's name at any financial institution — bank, brokerage firm, mutual fund company. The child gains full access to the account at the legal age, which is 21 in Washington State. Starting at that age, there are no restrictions on withdrawals.

Joint accounts in the name of the child and parent or grandparent. Between the ages of 14 and 17, banks require a parent to be joint owner of an account. Once the children turn 18, they cannot remove the guardian as joint owner without his/her approval.

529 Plans set up to fund education. The beneficiaries named in these plans have no rights to the money or how it is invested, regardless of their age or schooling needs. The account owner gets to decide how to disperse funds and can change beneficiaries any time.

Trusts created for the benefit of the child. The person who sets up and funds the trust (the grantor) can specify the amount and timing of distributions to any number of beneficiaries during the life of the grantor and/or after he/she passes away.

For more on accounts for children, read this blog post by LNWM's Kristi Mathisen.

ABOUT LAIRD NORTON WEALTH MANAGEMENT

With nearly $5 billion in assets under advisement, Laird Norton Wealth Management is the Northwest's premier wealth management company. Founded in 1967 to serve the financial management needs of the Laird and Norton families, the firm now provides integrated wealth management solutions to more than 600 individuals, families, business leaders, private foundations and nonprofit organizations.

DISCLOSURE

All investments involve a level of risk, and past performance is not a guarantee of future investment results. The value of investments and the income derived from them can go down as well as up. Future returns are not guaranteed and a loss of principal may occur. All investment performance can be affected by general economic conditions and the extent and timing of investor participation in both the equity and fixed income markets. Fees charged by LNWMM will reduce the net performance of the investment portfolio.

The information presented herein does not constitute and should not be construed as legal advice or as an offer to buy or sell any investment product or service. Any opinions or investment planning solutions herein described may not be suitable for all investors nor apply to all situations. All opinions expressed are those of Laird Norton Wealth Management and are current only as of the date appearing on this material.

Any accounting, business or tax advice contained in this presentation (or communication, including attachments and enclosures) is not intended as a thorough, in-depth analysis of specific issues, nor a substitute for a formal opinion, nor is it sufficient to avoid tax-related penalties.

Some investments may not be publicly traded and they may only allow redemptions at certain times conditioned on various notice provisions and other factors as more fully described in the related offering and subscription documents provided at the time of the investment. Due to the nature of these types of investment funds, hedge funds, fund of funds, and similar partnership-like investment vehicles, they should be considered illiquid. In addition to restrictions on redemption, they often include holdback provisions that may delay a full redemption for several months or longer. There is no guarantee that the amount of the initial investment can be received upon redemption. Due to the nature of the tax reporting that may be available from these types of investments, clients should expect to extend the filing of their tax returns.

A benchmark is an unmanaged index, and its performance does not include any advisory fees, transaction costs or other charges that may be incurred in connection with your investments. Indices are statistical composites and are shown for informational purposes only. It is not possible to invest directly in an index. Indices are unmanaged and are not subject to management fees. Any benchmark whose return is shown for comparison purposes may include different holdings, a different number of holdings, and a different degree of investment in individual securities, industries or economic sectors than the investments and/or investment accounts to which it is compared. Comparisons of individual account or portfolio performance to an index or benchmark composed of indices are unreliable as indicators of future performance of an actual account or portfolio. Actual performance presented represents past performance net of investment management fees unless otherwise noted. Other fees, such as custodial fees or transaction related fees may not be reflected in the actual performance results shown.

Certain information herein has been obtained from public third party data sources, outside funds and investment managers. Although we believe this information to be reliable, no representation or warranty, expressed or implied, is made, and no liability is accepted by Laird Norton Wealth Management or any of its officers, agents or affiliates as to the accuracy, completeness or correctness of the information herein contained. In addition, due to the nature of an investment or the date of the creation of the attached presentation, some values shown or used in the calculation of performance may be based on estimates that are subject to change.

The attached materials may contain confidential information that is intended only for the person to whom it is presented. By accepting this information, you agree to maintain its confidentiality and not to distribute it to any other person without the express permission of Laird Norton Wealth Management. All data presented is current only as of the date thereon shown. Laird Norton Wealth Management is comprised of two distinct entities that may offer similar services to clients. Laird Norton Trust Company is a State of Washington chartered trust company. Its wholly owned subsidiary, Laird Norton Tyee Asset Strategies, LLC, is an Investment Advisor registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Such registration does not imply any level of skill or expertise.